Sustainable Commuting

Make every day more sustainable by changing up your commute!

Biking to work is just one of many sustainable commuting options

For many of us, making small sustainable choices is a no-brainer. Reusable bags at the grocery store? Check! Turning off the lights when you leave the room? Check! Refillable water bottles instead of plastic disposable ones? Check!

One of the biggest differences you can make to reduce your carbon footprint is a decision you make every day - getting to work!

Even if it's just once a week, trying out a more sustainable commuting option can make a difference - and you might even enjoy switching up your routine!

Looking to improve your commute? Try one of these alternatives to driving alone:

- Bike to work
- Ride Caltrain or another form of public transit
- Carpool with a coworker

Explore these options and more on the Stanford Medicine Transportation Services website.

Exterior Management Crosswalk Upgrades

Making campus safer for staff, patients, and visitors

The crosswalks at Blake Wilbur were recently refreshed as a part of Exterior Management's work to improve the hospital campus!

The Stanford Health Care Exterior Management Department works hard to maintain and improve the look, functionality, and safety of the grounds around the main hospital.

Recently, Exterior Management completed a re-do of many pedestrian crosswalks around campus. This included a paint refresh for an improved look and to make the crosswalk more visible for pedestrians and drivers!

This crosswalk in front of 300 Pasteur uses bright white & red paint for extra visibility
