The Hoover Pavilion Garage Adds New Electric Vehicle (EV) Chargers

Staff and patients can now enjoy convenient EV Charging at the Hoover Pavilion Garage.

EV charging stations were recently installed at the Hoover Pavilion Garage (217 Quarry Road, Palo Alto) to accommodate both staff and patients, and a ribbon-cutting ceremony was held on February 9th to celebrate the installation. The Hoover Pavilion Garage EV charging stations is Stanford Medicine's latest milestone toward sustainable transportation.

The EV charging stations can be found on the street level of the Hoover Pavilion Garage. The same rules for parking in the garage apply to the charging stations - a valid 'C' or 'Z' parking permit is required for staff parking and hourly payment for patient parking.

In accordance with the City of Palo Alto's guidelines, the new charging stations will charge in kWh (Kilowatt-Hour) increments rather than a flat hourly rate. Users will be billed based on the amount of electricity consumed rather than the length of time the vehicle was plugged in. The EV charging costs will be applied in addition to garage rates.

You can learn more about EV charging stations near the Stanford Medicine main campus, including pricing and charging types by clicking the link below.

Make Your Commute More Efficient with Bicycling

The perks of bicycling to work at Stanford Medicine.

The new Hoover Pavilion Bike Cage had its first bike parked by Dr. Maren Pedersen, an attending physician who commutes to work from Palo Alto.

With the rising demand for healthier and more sustainable modes of transportation, bicycling to work has become increasingly popular. At Stanford Medicine, biking is not only encouraged, but it's also made easier with bicycle parking, showers, and repair stations available all around the main campus.

One of the latest additions to Stanford Medicine's biking facilities is the Hoover Bike Cage. The new bicycle parking facility provides parking for over 40 bicycles and is accessible using a Stanford Health Care or Lucile Packard Children's Hospital staff ID badge. The bike cage is conveniently located near the shower and locker room at Hoover Pavilion so you can freshen up after your ride. For more details about the shower and locker room facilities at the main hospital campus, click here.

There are many bicycle parking facilities, showers, and repair stations located throughout the main campus. Click the link below to view a map of all the bicycle facilities Stanford Medicine has to offer.
