License Plate Recognition (LPR) Technology. Stanford Medicine Transportation Services and Stanford University both employ license plate recognition, or LPR, technology for parking operation and enforcement purposes. Use of LPR technology allows parking operations and enforcement staff to manage and monitor parking permits and parking utilization.

Collection and Use

Data collection. Personally identifiable data such as name, email address and mobile phone numbers is collected from users as described in the table above. Users provide this data when purchasing parking. LPR technology uses cameras mounted at parking facilities, cameras mounted on mobile vehicles and handheld devices to scan license plates of vehicles parked in Stanford Medicine facilities. Stanford University also scans license plates using LPR technology in parking facilities it manages which may include facilities that you park in. License plates are publicly available and scanning occurs one vehicle and one area at a time. The process of scanning license plates is similar to the process of checking for permits on a windshield.

Data use. Stanford Medicine Transportation Services collects, stores, and uses this data only for parking and transportation-related uses and to comply with Stanford Medicine or Stanford University policies and applicable laws and regulations, including the California Vehicle Code (which is enforced on the Stanford campus) and the requirements of land use permits issued by Santa Clara County and other governmental authorities. The purposes for which your data may be used include the following:

- To evaluate your parking usage type and frequency to determine if you would benefit from a different permit type or could be eligible for incentive programs or alternative commuting solutions.
- To solicit feedback about our programs, including the use of LPR for parking management.
- To evaluate the effectiveness of programs and services in changing parking choices and/or commute behavior.
- To notify you of information, updates, resources, programs, services, initiatives, or surveys related to transportation.
- To calculate parking rates based on utilization among participants as a whole and by groups and to design strategies to increase use of alternatives to driving alone.
- To suggest and plan future parking and transportation programming and services at Stanford.

Stanford Medicine Transportation Services uses third-party vendors and information technology service providers for the storage and processing of this data, as well as general administration of parking and transportation programs and for the other purposes set forth in this document. We do not sell or license your identifiable data to any third parties for any other purpose. Aggregated data that is not identifiable to any particular individual, including aggregated LPR data, may be shared with other Stanford Medicine or Stanford University organizations and third parties for research, program management and other purposes related to Transportation Services operations. Stanford Medicine Transportation Services also shares data with Stanford University Transportation Services. Your data that is shared with University Transportation Services will be governed by University Transportation Services’ privacy policy which is located here.
Data Security

Stanford Medicine Transportation Services retains license plate information and personally identifiable data in a secure and private manner. As with all personally identifiable data at Stanford Medicine, LPR data is managed with appropriate information technology security measures in place.

Access to personally identifiable data and license plate data will require individual logins, providing added security, tracking, and accountability for those who access the data.

The LPR data and other personally identifiable data will not be used for any unauthorized purposes and will be limited to groups with a need to know. License plate data will only be associated with other identifiable data where necessary to process permits, invoices, and other parking information and to achieve the purposes for which data may be used under this standard.

This Privacy Standard will be updated periodically to reflect any material changes in our programs and practices. These changes will be evident by inserting a new “Effective Date” (see below) and are effective when they are posted to our website at stanfordmedicinetransportation.org.
